

1,500 Youths Ask Work This Summer

Only 343 Jobs Found Available

More than 1,500 youths have applied at the Iowa State Employment Service for part or full time work for the summer. Col. Donald Speck, in charge of summer youth employment, said Thursday.

The applications include those from youths 14 through 21 years of age, from junior high students to college students. Some of the youth applied for jobs through the Youth Study Committee while others applied directly to the ISES office.

The Youth Study Committee is in charge of coordinating all summer employment programs for youth. The youth who apply for summer work are automatically placed in the Youth Program.

Agencies Cooperate
City agencies, county agencies, and the schools have all cooperated in making the Summer Youth Program as effective as possible through the leadership of the Youth Study Committee.

Speck said also that there are only 343 jobs at the present time for these 1,500 youth. Some of these job slots have already been filled, but about 300 are now open.

The jobs include those supplied through Metropolitan Improvement Services, the Neighborhood Youth Corps, Community Action Program, Jobs for Youth and other requests from private employers.

500 Letters Sent
The Jobs for Youth Committee, formed out of the Youth Study Committee, sent out over 500 letters to Waterloo employers asking them to provide jobs for youth this summer. Eight jobs were offered by private employers because of the plea from Jobs for Youth.

Another 27 requests from private employers have been received by ISES.

35 Private Jobs
A total of 35 jobs from private employers have been pledged for this summer from the more than 1,000 possible employers in Waterloo.

Speck said that the 1,500 job requests will probably be added to as soon as the outlying high schools are let out for the summer next week.

The Jobs for Youth Committee is making follow-up contacts this week asking employers to reconsider their needs for the summer.

The Chamber of Commerce sent a plea for support to Waterloo employers in their May newsletter. The plea read, "We encourage you to review your needs for this summer and participate in this program." The plea was headed by the

Sees Tornado Warning Need

Mayor Says Civil Defense Vital Aid

Mayor Lloyd Turner said Thursday that the tornado disaster which struck Northeast Iowa communities points up the importance of having a working civil defense operation.

Mayor Turner, who was Black Hawk County Civil Defense director for four years prior to his election as mayor, said the storms proved the usefulness of a civil defense organization that can direct recovery operations.

He said the funnels which hit Charles City, Oelwein, Maynard and other towns, also proved the importance of an adequate warning system.

Siren Warning Here
Waterloo has incorporated its civil defense nuclear attack warning sirens into a warning system for tornadoes.

A steady blast of the sirens is the signal that the city is directly threatened by a tornado or severe windstorm.

Weather Bureau Helps
Turner said the Waterloo metropolitan area is fortunate to have a U. S. Weather Bureau station at the Waterloo Municipal Airport because it has persons who observe weather conditions in the general area and who call in tornado sightings.

Turner said the value of having a full-time civil defense di-

Hearing on Gun Charge Is July 8

A preliminary hearing has been set for July 8 in the case of Mrs. Lois Ann Rand, 31, of 928 Franklin St., accused of carrying a concealed weapon on Monday night.

She and James David Johnson, also of Waterloo, were arrested in a car behind the Esco Supply Co. Inc., at E. 11th and Sycamore Streets.

Mrs. Rand had a .25 caliber automatic in her purse, police said, and Johnson has a .22 pistol stashed under the seat.

The two were investigated in connection with a number of bad checks. At the time they were arrested police said they also gave false names. Bond on Mrs. Rand was continued at $1,000.

Johnson's case is still pending.
